Two British Amateur Heroines Thanked By Israel For Taking Twenty-Nine Out Of Pre-War Germany

Two unobtrusive non-Jewish English heroines traveled from their quiet suburban home to London to receive Israel's thanks for smuggling twenty-nine Jews out of pre-war Germany. The expression of gratitude was presented by the Israeli Ambassador, Arthur Lourie, to Misses Louise and Ida Cook, says James Feron, in the New York Times. They seemed to think it was all unnecessary.

The middle-aged sisters, who are not Jewish, had made repeated trips to Germany and Austria in the guise of being rich and eccentric opera lovers. They transferred documents, arranged passage, smuggled out valuables and, of course, attended the opera.

They even managed to get one man out of Buchenwald concentration camp in 1939, but he died shortly after arriving in Britain. Others who were rescued are still alive, however, and five were present at the embassy to add their thanks.

One of them was Walter Stiefel, now a lecturer in modern literature at Manchester University. He said the Cook sisters' exploits "now seem to be right out of James Bond."

"I think if they realized the danger of their work they would never have been so successful," he said. "They were just naive, warm-hearted women — and they got away with it. They just don't look the type."

"Take my case," he said. "I was thirty-six years old in 1939 and I'd been unable to work for six years. I was not only racially involved, but politically as well, printing leaflets and trying to organize some sort of resistance.

"The Cooks became a legend and every time they entered the country there was a chain reaction over the underground grapevine. Finally some English friends directed the sisters to my mother and me."

How did they make contact? "We almost didn't," Mr. Stiefel said. "I was supposed to be carrying an English newspaper in the Berlin station, but just that day there were no English papers available. I bought a Dutch one, but it was no good."

"They were staying at the Adlon Hotel in Berlin — fantastic. It was Nazi headquarters, where Hitler stayed. But I called them and we made another rendezvous."

Mr. Stiefel said it was as important to get an entry visa to Britain, or any other country, as it was to get exit permits from the Nazis. The Cook sisters arranged these documents.

The two women would arrive in fairly shabby clothing and with half-empty suitcases. They would stitch London labels on the refugees' best clothing, wear some and carry out the rest, says the New York Times, with as much jewelry and other valuables as they thought the border guards would permit. They would use a different frontier post each time they left Germany.

Miss Louise said it all began when a friend, the late conductor, Clemens [redacted] from them in Vienna of the plight of some Jewish friends. The Cooks decided to help.

"We started in an amateurish way," she said, "and I really think it was more a case of ingenuity than of real danger."

Murder Trial Of Auschwitz Nazi Staff, Now In Second Year, Is Longest, Most Exhausting In Black Record

The longest and most exhausting trial in the grim record of post-war prosecutions of Nazi criminals began its second year, in the Assize Court of Frankfurt, where Judge Hans Hofmeyer presiding, is trying, on charges of murder and complicity in murder, twenty former members of the staff of the Auschwitz extermination camp in southern Poland, says the New York Times. About 4,000,000 prisoners died there in the years 1941-44.

The twenty men who sit in the converted auditorium of a community center building in an outlying district of West Germany's financial capital were carefully selected by the public prosecutor. They range in rank from Robert Mulka, who made a smooth transition from deputy camp commandant to successful Hamburg businessman, to former S. S. Private First Class Pery Broad, a squad leader in the camp guard detail.

One or more of the twenty was on duty at Auschwitz during each phase of its infamous history.

The purpose of the state in so organizing the trial is put frankly by the youthful chief prosecutor, Hans-Joachim Kugler: "We are of course seeking to bring to account individuals we believe to be guilty of grave crimes," he said recently to the New York Times. "But there is a larger purpose in this prosecution. We are building up the most complete and precise record of the Auschwitz crime that is within our power.

"The highest value of this trial is to put on the record the untarnished truth and — one day to [illegible] the fact and meaning of its recent past."

Statistics of the trial indicate the magnitude of the task. In the first year, 351 witnesses testified during the 122 days the court convened. The ultimate total of witnesses will run well over 300.

The final month of the trial — estimated now to end this spring — will be devoted primarily to the introduction of documentary evidence, perhaps more than 1,000 items. Behind Judge Hofmeyer's bench there stands a long table on which is arrayed in manuscript form the product of the prosecution's four-year pre-trial investigation. The row of folders is nine feet long.

Dr. Kugler maintains in his office a big chart whereby he keeps track of the developing case against each defendant, like a general with a battle map. Almost 3,000,000 words have already been uttered in the courtroom.

What has come out of this massive undertaking so far is an infinity of detail on the gruesome events that occurred at Auschwitz, says the New York Times. Almost every witness has contributed one or two or ten specific accounts of torture, murder, sadism and — very occasionally — mercy.

The prosecution now is concentrating on an exposition of the bureaucratic and organizational system which efficiently wrought about these intended results.

The edifice of total truth that Dr. Kugler aims to build has taken shape. Nothing said at the Auschwitz trial has substantially altered the broad outlines of the record already known from the Allied war crimes prosecutions at Nuremberg and subsequent historical and legal inquiries.

This accumulation of evidence has only filled in the gaps, refined the detail of known events and narrowed down questions of individual responsibility.

Since 1960 only charges of murder or complicity in murder have been made. Well over 1,000 individuals are now so charged and awaiting trial. Justice authorities estimate that at least 400 such cases will take place, some perhaps as late as five years from now.

[illegible] investigative agency, established in 1958 at Ludwigsburg [illegible] the task of searching out records for indictments of Nazi crimes and criminals. The purpose is to demonstrate to the world that every possible stone will have been turned to bring to the bar guilty men.

Dr. Kugler, for example, estimates that it would take 100 specialists a year to comb through the United States Army's archives of Nazi Germany at Alexandria, Va., to exhaust every possibility of discovering new evidence.

In the end, the Bonn government will be required to make a difficult moral decision. The ultimate question is this: Can the German Federal Republic, which holds forth as the heir of an ancient German tradition of honor and justice, afford to allow even one mass murderer to go free and immune?

If the issue is finally posed in these terms, it can be expected that a majority of West Germany's 57 millions would answer no, says the New York Times.

But this is not to say that the Auschwitz trial or the manhunt or the campaign to exend the statute of limitations are supported by a popular consensus, says the New York Times. A variety of opinion research reports show that about two-thirds of West Germans would like to close the books on the grisly past.

Among the middle-aged and elderly this attitude is dominant. Only a handful of these have anything to fear from the law. But for those who participated in or went along with or just passively observed the Nazi criminal machine, the raking over of old coals imposes a heavy, even agonizing burden.

West Germany, nevertheless, has its older leaders who are conscious of a deep sense of responsibility and a post-war generation that feels compelled to come to terms with Germany's black past.

200 Orthodox Rabbis Called On To Lead Aid For Negro Cause

The Rabbinical Council of America, the largest Orthodox body, established a Task Force for Civil Rights designed to intensify involvement by Orthodox religious leaders in the Negro fight for human equality and opportunity. Details of the project were outlined at a conference of the Council's social actions commission at Yeshiva University by Rabbi Israel Miller, president of the rabbinic body, says the New York Times. It represents 900 rabbis.

The task force, Rabbi Miller said, now numbers two hundred rabbis, who will participate in meetings and demonstrations thoughout the U.S. "to arouse public opinion to the need for implementing permanently the basic rights of all United States citizens."

Rabbi Miller said that although the Orthodox rabbinate was playing a strong role in the struggle for civil rights, "it is felt that a deeper involvement is called for." He said that the special group would be active [illegible] local and national [illegible] housing [illegible] the underprivileged, with emphasis on the Negro.

The group, he said, will work toward [illegible] dropouts, aid in the [illegible] of scholarships for gifted young children, and [illegible] actively in religious and racial [illegible].

[illegible] at the same session, Dr. [illegible], co-ordinator of the National Council of Churches, said that Orthodox rabbis with their [illegible] concern for the Torah "have [illegible] but to be [illegible] of the [illegible] action.

Dr. [illegible] identity with the civil rights struggle, said that "every rabbi, every clergyman, every priest who has participated in Selma must come back and talk with his fellow religious leaders about the shame they have permitted in this nation."

She said that it was not enough for religious leaders to report on Selma "but they must intensify their efforts in the passage of the voter registration bill," proposed by President Johnson, reports the New York Times. Rabbi Leonard B. Gewirtz, chairman of the rabbinic group's social actions commission, said "it is the Jews' own historical and religious heritage that compels us to demonstrate and manifest full solidarity with the plight of the Negro."

An authority on the American Jewish Community said in Cincinnati, Ohio, that American Jews should join other forces in behalf of equality for all Americans but should not permit Jewish institutions to become non-sectarian.

Dr. Oscar Janowsky, professor of history at City College in New York and former adviser to the League of Nations High Commission for Refugees, spoke on "A New Look at American Jewry" at the American Jewish Historical Society's 83d annual dinner meeting held at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion.

"The issue must be faced squarely, and the issue in Jewish communal institutions is non-discrimination, not non-sectarianism", he said. "All Americans should be welcome in Jewish institutions but the character and justification for Jewish agencies must be their Jewish programming and orientation.

"I believe that Jews, like other liberal Americans have the responsibility of cooperating in the effort to combat poverty and discrimination. As individuals, they should and do join with non-Jewish Americans in promoting the cause of freedom and equality for all, regardless of race, color, or creed," says the New York Times. Dr. Leon J. Obermayer of Philadelphia was re-elected president of the historical society.

Bnai Brith Head Served Jews Loyally And Well

Frank Goldman, a former international president of Bnai Brith who played an active role in the relocation of displaced Jews after World War II, died of a heart attack at his home in Lowell, Mass. He was seventy-four years old. Mr. Goldman headed Bnai Brith, the Jewish service organization, from 1947 to 1963, a critical time in resettling survivors of Nazi atrocities, says the New York Times, and of the founding of the State of Israel.

He was active in providing material support and encouragement for the re-establishment of Jewish cultural life in Western Europe and later in Israel. In 1947 and 1948, Mr. Goldman visited President Harry S. Truman several times to plead the cause of a home for the Jews in Palestine.

On January 31, 1949, when President Truman signed the United States proclamation recognizing Israel, Mr. Goldman was one of the guests invited to the White House for the ceremony.

Later, Mr. Goldman was a founding member of the Conference of Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, organized in 1951 to negotiate restitution by West Germany to Jewish survivors of Nazi oppression.

In the fall of 1952, the negotiations led to West German agreement to pay $822 million worth of goods to Israel over a period of 12 to 14 years. Of this amount, Israel agreed to give $107 million to the Conference, which represented Jews in eight countries.

Mr. Goldman also was active in the 1950's in promoting discussions with the Government of Aus[illegible] at settlement of

German Paper Accused Of Inciting To Race Hatred

The Public Prosecutor's office in Munich has instituted proceedings against the ultra-nationalist newspaper National und Soldaten Zeitung for incitement to race hatred against the Jewish people. Dr. Bernhard Bader, a senior state prosecutor, declared that the action arose from a number of suits filed against the newspaper by private persons for articles appearing in recent issues.

Since the controversy over prosecution of Nazi crimes and the crisis with Cairo arose in January, the newspaper had, he said, used language strongly reminiscent of anti-semitic Nazi publications to expose what it alleged to be the plot of international Jewry to poison German relations with the Arab world, says the London Times. Some of the articles appearing on this subject had carried such headings as, "Will international Jewry decide to boycott Bonn?", "Zionism as the enemy of peace in the Middle East"; "Revenge for Auschwitz or law?".

Dr. Bader stated that these and other articles were being examined to see whether they contained anything punishable under the relevant article of the criminal code.

Headdress Is A Must For Weddings, Also Gloves

At any wedding the women guests should wear gloves and hats. Black gloves should be the last choice but, if the ensemble cries out for them, they are now permissible. If a hat is absolutely out of the question, then a suitable headdress must be acquired because the guest must not appear bareheaded.

The guest's costume should be in keeping with the formality, or lack of it, at the ceremony, and should be as smart as possible. But there should be no attempt to draw attention from the bride.

Probing The Camel's Secret For The Benefit Of Man

By Victor Neil, in Scopus, publication of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem

Seven million square miles of the earth's surface is desert — areas of intense heat, considerable wind and almost no water. Often rich in minerals, almost unpopulated but frequently neighbouring on densely populated regions, they present a vast challenge to the world's growing population. In an ever-increasing degree man is today penetrating these lands of shadowless noon, applying his ingenuity to the task of pushing back the barriers of physical and climatic conditions.

Israel, with its intensive efforts to make the Negev — its own relatively large desert region — viable, with its scientific know-how and the almost instantaneous transfer of laboratory advances to field practice, is an ideal testing ground for research on techniques that are coming into increasingly urgent demand.

Though academicians profess to shun what they call "directed research", the study of desert conditions is a recurrent motif in the hundreds of research projects now under way in the Hebrew University's Faculty of Agriculture in Rehovot. Plant physiologists are investigating water balance under arid conditions and plant resistance to heat and salt. Geneticists are adapting the high producing cereals crops of the cold and temperate regions to subtropical conditions. Animal physiologists are studying the effect of heat stress on milk and egg production. As a result of certain experiments date palms and gladioli are now appearing in the Negev wastes.

These projects have a significance that stretches beyond Israel's borders. They are relevant, first and foremost, to other Middle Eastern countries that labour under similar climatic handicaps; and in universal terms, they will make the exploitation of more and more of the earth's surface possible for the most basic of human activities: agriculture.

The study of desert conditions begins with man himself, who, unlike most animals, consistently penetrates areas to which he is ill adapted. Warmblooded, he must maintain his body temperature within narrow limits; failure of the body's thermoregulatory apparatus is invariably fatal.

The body keeps cool by evaporating water: sweat, the most diluted of the bodily excretions, is 99% water. The quantities evaporated are prodigious — a man walking at a moderate pace in a temperature of 100°F. (38°C.) loses two pints of water an hour, i.e., a loss in body weight of two pounds. A 5% loss of weight (7 lbs. in an average man) impairs physical and mental efficiency; a 10% loss endangers life.

By remaining fully clothed, avoiding the sun and confining his activity to the cool of night, man can conserve his body water and extend his range of activities. But his performance falls far short of that of the animals specifically adapted to desert life. So it is to these latter that the scientists have now turned in an effort to understand problems of adaptation to desert conditions.

The camel, for example. It can survive two weeks without water, losing up to 30% of its body weight without ill effects. Its phenomenal desert hardiness has in fact given rise to an entire mythology. It is said to "store" water by drinking deeply before long trips, to keep water in its hump or in special stomach sacs. Scandinavian physiologist Schmidt-Nielsen, pioneer in the field, has exploded these superstitions. The camel, of course, is non-telepathic and cannot possibly know when it is going to set out on a desert journey; its stomach sacs have a digestive function and hold a mere gallon; and the hump consists of fat which can be metabolised to form water, but the process requires oxygen and more water would be lost by respiratory evaporation than gained by the metabolic process.

Schmidt-Nielsen has provided a partial answer as to why the camel is able to survive as it does. He has shown that the camel's normal body temperature can be anything between 34° and 40°C.—a range of 11°F. In human beings, of course, normal temperature is stable, and a variation of even one degree indicates malfunction. But before the camel even begins to sweat its temperature reaches 103°F., which is as hot as many a desert day.

Dr. Kalman Perk, of the Department of Animal Husbandry and Biochemistry in the Faculty of Agriculture, whose special field of interest is animal anatomy and physiology, has gone further and elucidated several hitherto unknown aspects of the camel's desert adaptation which may have far-reaching physiological implications.

It is known that at a single session a thirsty camel can drink 30 gallons of water in ten minutes, completely regaining its water loss and resuming its normal appearance. A large part of the water is absorbed directly into the bloodstream. In human beings, however, 600 cc. of water introduced into the blood has serious results, and the ratio is equally dangerous for most domestic animals.

Studying why it is that "dilution" of the camel's blood does not lead to bursting of the red blood cells as a result of lowered osmotic pressure, Dr. Perk has found that the camel's red blood cells are able to expand to as much as 245% of their original volume without bursting; the corresponding figure for man is 150%, for cattle, sheep and horses slightly higher, and for donkeys higher still.

By introducing camel blood into a series of salt solutions of decreasing concentration he has demonstrated that as the salt concentration drops, the red blood cells burst at only 0.11% concentration, while in humans they do so at the relatively high concentration of 0.38%.

Furthermore, Dr. Perk has shown that the albumin content in camel blood is almost double that of Friesian cows. Albumin has the ability to "bind" and retain water in the bloodstream, so that the "remarkable thirst endurance of the camel", in Perk's words, "may be partly due to its high serum albumin levels". This helps to explain the fact that even after losing 30% of its body weight the camel's blood volume is scarcely changed. Heat strokes in humans, on the other hand, result from circulatory deficiency because the blood loses water, becomes more viscous, and imposes a severe strain on the heart. Moreover, hot blood from inside the body cannot effectively reach the cool periphery.

Do "desert adapted" human beings — Yemenites, for example — have less red blood cell fragility than those from temperate climates? Perhaps. No one has yet investigated the question.

But this immediately leads to another problem: new-born mammals receive an entirely liquid diet, rapidly absorbed into the bloodstream. Calves and other ruminants have for the first few weeks of life what is known as the "swallowing reflex", i.e., liquids bypass the rumen and reach the true stomach directly. The blood dilution, as measured by the number of cells per cubic millimetre, is enormous. Why are there no ill-effects? The only explanation seems to be that blood composition at birth and several weeks later differ, and a series of experiments has shown this to be true.

The experiments are continuing. In cooperation with research workers in other fields scientists at Rehovot will also examine the implications of the camel's blood physiology for their relevance to human beings, whilst in certain Faculty of Agriculture laboratories investigations are being made of related problems. All these combine to form a new chapter in the story of man's control of his environment — a story which is as old as the story of the human race itself.

ONE-MAN SHANGHAI COUNCIL CARING FOR CHINA'S DWINDLING JEWISH COMMUNITY

Shanghai: the Sephardic Jewish Communal Association, the Shanghai Ashkenazi Jewish Communal Association, and the Juedische Gemeinde. Each was doing its own relief and migration work. After many mass migrations during the period from 1947 to 1949, it was considered convenient to form a centralized organization to take care of the remaining Jews, and in September, 1949, the Council was founded to manage the combined operation.

With the continual departure of Jews from Shanghai, the activities and work of the Council have also reduced in scale. At present, the Council has only one local employee who has worked many years with the Jewish organizations. Simultaneously, the Council also deals with matters in connection with the Sephardic Jewish Communal Association, the Shanghai Ashkenazi Jewish Communal Association, and the Juedische Gemeinde.

Mr. Yudalevich, after concluding his faithfully detailed report on conditions in an almost extinct Jewish community, states that as so many remaining Jews are in poor circumstances, the Chinese Relief Association has taken over the distribution of cash grants since March, 1961, and is presently paying a total relief check of approximately 300 Chinese dollars to the community.

The man who for so long guided the affairs of Chinese Jewry seems to be adjusted to the fact that he must, almost singlehanded, close the book of its history.

P. I. Yudalevich, whose letters are personally typed in perfect English, is a former merchant, a widower without children, who has lived in China since 1922. His life and work have been devoted to the good and welfare of thousands of Jews whom he has seen come — and go.

Negro Support For Jewish Causes Cited By Jewish Labor Committee

Growing Negro participation in Jewish-sponsored demonstrations against anti-Semitism is reported by the Jewish Labor Committee. "In a number of recent instances," states Emanuel Muravchik, national director of the J.L.C., "Negro groups and individuals have taken part in protest actions organized by the Jewish community. This is a most gratifying trend because it demonstrates that some Negro civil rights activists see their battle for human rights as a universal one, applying to all of the oppressed, no matter what their religion or skin color."

As illustration of this trend, the Jewish Labor Committee leader cited three recent events:

On January 14, when all of the major Jewish organizations demonstrated in front of a number of German Consulates for an extension of the statute of limitations governing the indictment of Nazi criminals, Negroes participated in the picket lines in at least two cities, Detroit and Philadelphia.

In the former city the Jewish Labor Committee representative, Jack Carper, was designated by the Jewish Community Relations Council to invite Negro participation in the picketing. The response was a large delegation from the local chapters of the Congress of Racial Equality and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In addition, the demonstration was officially endorsed by two local Negro labor organizations, the Trade Union Leadership Conference and the Metropolitan Detroit Labor Community Association. In Philadelphia, individual Negroes participated in the picket line.

There was official participation by the Negro Trade Union Leadership Conference in the campaign against Soviet anti-Semitism of the Philadelphia Jewish Community Relations Council. Part of the campaign consists of a series of picket line demonstrations in front of the Soviet Embassy in Washington. The picket line has been manned jointly by the Negro labor group and the Philadelphia chapter of the Jewish Labor Committee. The last time both groups went to Washington together was to participate in the March on Washington of August, 1963.

The third instance was a letter by Dr. Martin Luther King against Soviet anti-Semitism which was published in the New York Times on January 16. The Nobel Peace Prize winner stated: "I should like to add my voice to the list of distinguished Americans of all faiths who have called the injustices perpetrated against the Jewish community in the Soviet Union to the attention of the world. The struggle of the Negro people for freedom is inextricably interwoven with the universal struggle of all peoples to be free from discrimination and oppression. In the name of humanity I urge that the Soviet Government end all the discriminatory measures against its Jewish community. I will not remain silent in the face of injustice."

Composer Has Stopped Chasing Rainbows For Pots Of Gold

Frederick Loewe, who has been living off his earnings from "My Fair Lady," as well as from "Camelot" and "Brigadoon," has stopped chasing rainbows. The 63-year-old composer is having a "lovely" time not working, writes Milton Esterow, in the New York Times. "Too many people have gone in for this senseless chasing of rainbows," he says. "How many rainbows does one need?"

Among other things, he took a five-week trip along the coast of Italy on his 80-foot, 80-ton yacht Fatima, "which has a crew of five and the best cuisine in the Mediterranean," he says. He also has a Rolls-Royce convertible and a swimming pool in Palm Springs.

He has written no music since "Camelot" in 1960. "I haven't the slightest intention to write another note," he said in an interview at the Dorset Hotel, 30 West 54th Street, in New York. He has had a penthouse there for five years but is giving it up because he spends little time here.

Mr. Loewe is philosophical about future composing. "Who knows how it will be when I'm 102?" he says.

He stopped "because I'm having a wonderful time and writing a show is no fun. There is no reason for me to work now. I don't need glory, I don't need money. I can use the time better". He added:

"I'm deeply grateful for what's happening to me and I would be an absolute fool to get all tensed up with another show. This, after all, is what we're striving for — to be happy."

"When I was doing the score for 'Gigi' in Paris in 1957," he continued, "for the first time in my life it became clear to me I had never seen anything. I never saw. I only heard. The eyes opened up."

He had been a heavy gambler but gave it up last December, says the New York Times. "I had reached the saturation point," he said. "All of a sudden I saw the complete idiocy of it, I had become a member of that royal clique of gamblers, of great suckers. They're the kind of people who can come into any casino and say, 'Give me $50,000 in chips.' You just sign your name. You don't even have to give a check. At the end of the season you settle up. You can only get into this exclusive circle by losing steadily through the years until your credit is completely unchallenged."

Mr. Loewe, who was born in Vienna, began playing the piano at five. At 13 made his fist appearance as a soloist with the Berlin Symphony Orchestra. He came to New York in 1924 at the age of 23.

He was a bantamweight boxer and played piano in Greenwich Village night spots and Yorkville beer halls. "The first time I ate properly was in 1944 when Alan Jay Lerner and I got $250,000 for the movie rights to our show "The Day Before Spring." Mr. Loewe had teamed up with Mr. Lerner, the lyricist and librettist, in 1942. They split after "Camelot."

He has turned down hundreds of offers, which would guarantee him a fortune, to do another show. "It takes courage to say no to a million dollars," he said.

"I like to eat — it is one of the great pleasures in the world — and I like to go out with women. I swim in my pool and I go horseback riding at 6:30 A.M. You know, I once had a job carrying the mail to a gold mine 11,700 feet high in the mountains of Montana."

Mr. Loewe was married in the nineteen-thirties but reportedly was separated some years ago. "I was married once, I'm not now," is all he will say, says the New York Times.

The composer offered some advice to young people in the business. "Keep on trying if at first you don't succeed," he said, "because remember, I didn't eat properly for twenty-one years."

★ JOINT CAMPAIGN ★

The goal is $4,515,000 for the 1965 Joint Campaign for Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal. Henry Blatt is general chairman; and Samuel Bronfman, is honorary campaign chairman. At least $335,000 more than last year is the objective. The Joint Campaign is conducted in partnership between the Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal, and supports the Jewish Agency for Israel in a large-scale rescue of Jews from certain countries and their resettlement in Israel. National participants in the Combined Jewish Appeal are: Canadian Jewish Congress, United Jewish Relief Agencies, Jewish Immigrant Aid Services. Local participants are: the Jewish General Hospital, Camp Bnai Brith, Jewish Laurentian Fresh Air Camp, Jewish Public Library, Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation; Federation of Jewish Community Services and its ten constituent agencies: Baron de Hirsch Institute and Jewish Child Welfare Bureau; Camp Wooden Acres; Golden Age Program of National Council of Jewish Women; Herzl Health Service Centre; Jewish Convalescent Hospital; Jewish Vocational Service; Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged; Mount Sinai Sanatorium, Neighbourhood House. The United Jewish Relief Agencies is sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress for support of Jewish welfare programs in 27 countries overseas and for subsidized aid to Jewish immigrants in Canada through the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services and other agencies. The funds which are raised for overseas programs are not transmitted in cash. They are provided in the form of Canadian credits and supplies that stimulate the export of Canadian goods such as lumber, wheat, etc. Among the local beneficiaries, are five major health agencies: the Jewish General Hospital, Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged, Mount Sinai Sanatorium, Jewish Convalescent Hospital, and Herzl Health Service Centre. The Joint Campaign is the only major fund-raising campaign in Montreal that includes hospitals and health agencies. In 1964, a total of $567,193 was allocated for health agency needs. This year these needs will be greater because most of the agencies have undertaken necessary building expansion or relocation programs. The Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged is in its new and larger building in Cote St. Luc. The Jewish Convalescent Hospital has its new building under construction to be completed before the end of the year. The Jewish General Hospital is involved in building expansion. The Herzl Health Service Centre, which offers a health program for people at lower income levels, is moving to new quarters for the convenience of people who need its services. The Jewish Immigrant Aid Services, a national agency which assists Jewish newcomers to settle in Canada, will move its Montreal offices this spring to a more suitable location. Baron de Hirsch Institute and Jewish Child Welfare Bureau, and Neighbourhood House have had to move recently with attendant increases in operating expenditures. The Combined Jewish Appeal is now completing its allocations from the 1964 Joint Campaign, confident that the funds required can be obtained in the community. Some of the local agencies are now seeking extra funds for more adequate services to the aged in provision of housing, etc.; expansion of the Jewish Vocational Service sheltered workshop program for emotionally disturbed and mentally retarded adolescents; special care for emotionally disturbed and other handicapped children who need residential treatment; and the like.

Of The Hebrew University: On April 1, in the presence of the Israeli President, Zalman Shazar, the Hebrew University celebrated the 40th anniversary of its opening on Mount Scopus on April 1, 1925, at a festive ceremony in the National Convention Centre (Binyanei Ha'ooma), in Jerusalem. The Deputy Prime Minister, Abba Eban, addressed over 3,000 persons, members of the Diplomatic Corps, and of the University's governing bodies, its teachers and officials ranging from veterans going back to 1928 to those attached to the institution and distinguished visitors from abroad. Eliahu Elath, president of the University, presided. Allan Bronfman, national president of the Canadian Friends; Bernard M. Bloomfield, president of Montreal Chapter; Professor J. H. Quastel, national secretary of the Canadian Friends; all members of the international board of governors of the University; and Samuel B. Risk, executive vice-president of the Canadian Friends, were there. A pageant depicted the history of the University. Recalling that the idea of a Jewish University was first mooted, although without practical results, as far back as 1456, in Sicily, it showed how it was again revived at the end of the last century and, during the next few decades, took shape with the birth of modern Zionism. Festive gatherings were held in towns, villages, and kibbutzim all over the country, to be addressed by Hebrew University professors.

Don't fiddle around... When it comes to gefilte fish, Mother's knows best.

Because we don't fiddle around when we make gefilte fish! We use only the plumpest, juiciest, young fish—fresh from icy Northern lakes. We add just the right pinch of spices. Then—just like the mothers of old—we slow simmer our gefilte fish to bring out all its tender, delicate flavor. Result: Mother's gefilte fish has that traditional taste and texture that's just like homemade. So for a glorious beginning to the Passover Seder—and for every festive occasion—serve Mother's, the fish for compliments.

A Good Town Up North Opens Its Heart To A Negro Boy From Down South

Prince Caesar Chambliss Jr., sixteen, attended Ridgefield High School for the first time and the white faces he saw all had smiles upon them.

The white faces that Prince has been seeing thus far in his short life have not often had smiles, at least not when they've been looking at him. Prince is a Negro and he comes from Birmingham, Alabama, says the New York Tribune. A couple of football players came up to Prince at the lunch break and invited him to the school cafeteria where they saw to it that he got a double portion of the dish of the day — hot dogs.

This may have been their way of making up to Prince a little for everything that had gone before.

Later, Prince, a bright boy with poise and dignity, played a sweet clarinet in the high school music room. He was a clarinetist in the band back at Parker High School, all-Negro school in Birmingham, where he was a straight-A student.

The Ridgefield high students — there are 1,186 of them — appeared to accept Prince with great friendliness. Many of them have gone out of their way to make him feel at home. They have invited him to so many parties that the white family with whom Prince is staying in Ridgefield have had to begin saying no. They don't want Prince to have so much social life that he skimps on his studying.

The boy arrived in Ridgefield five days before. This is an upper income Fairfield county community with a population of 12,000, including 150 Negroes. The high school, according to Dr. Harold E. Healy, the principal, has about fifteen Negro students.

Three days before Prince arrived the Ridgefield Board of Education, of which Rudolph Sykora, a New York securities analyst, is chairman, had ruled that Prince was not able to be considered a resident of Ridgefield.

At the same meeting, the Board of Education also ruled that Prince could not be admitted to the high school. After this, Joseph H. Donnelly, town counsel, advised the Board of Education that it might admit Prince to the high school but that it should charge $650 a year tuition. The Board voted to admit Prince to the high school and to charge the recommended tuition.

The boy, whose father is a postal clerk in Birmingham, is living at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George DePue in Branchville Road. Mr. DePue is a vice-president of Batten, Barton, Durstine, and Osborn, New York advertising agency, and is an ordained deacon of the Episcopal Church, says the New York Herald Tribune. He serves as an assistant at St. Philip's Episcopal Church in Harlem.

Prince will live with the DePues for the next two years while he completes high school. The DePues, who have three children of their own, provide board and lodging — and great warmth and affection — and Prince's transportation and clothing will be paid by the Carol Rosenberg Memorial Education Fund.

The Fund, which has collected $5,200, was recently established by friends in memory of Mrs. Rosenberg, a former president of the League of Women Voters of Ridgefield, who was particularly interested in the improvement of the education of children in deprived areas. She died on September 3 in a mountain climbing accident in National Park in Wyoming.

The American Friends Service Committee recommended Prince to the organizers of the memorial fund. Many Ridgefield residents have been shocked by the Board of Education action in charging tuition for Prince.

"I hope it does not look as if Ridgefield were anti-Negro, or stingy," Leo F. Carroll, Ridgefield's first electman said. "This town is neither the one nor the other. This is a good town. I hope that the board of education delays a long time before presenting its tuition bill. If necessary, I'll guarantee personally that it will be paid."

Five American Field Service exchange students from abroad have attended Ridgefield High School in the last few years and have paid no tuition. At present, two foreign students at the high school — one from the Netherlands, the other from Brazil — are paying no tuition.

Negro youngsters from the South are attending public schools in various Connecticut communities and are not charged tuition. Darien and several neighbouring towns offered to take Prince tuition-free when they heard of the action of the Ridgefield Board of Education. The Most Rev. Walter Curtis, Roman Catholic bishop of Bridgeport, offered to make a free place for the boy in the Danbury Catholic High School.

"Ridgefield seems to be full of nice people," said Prince when he was asked to sum up his first day in a Northern school. "Everyone tried to be helpful and to make me feel at home." Incidentally, says the New York Herald Tribune, his middle name, Caesar, came from the fact that his father was born by Caesarean section. Prince arrived the usual way.

ONLY P.C.V. IN JUNGLE WILL HAVE TWO PRIESTS AS SEDER COMPANY

A young Peace Corps Volunteer, isolated in the jungle community of Jiminez, Philippines, has expressed in moving terms his appreciation to the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB) for a Seder package which will enable him to observe the Passover festival. Harvey Alan Mogul wrote to JWB:

"I want to thank you very much for remembering me. I am nearly ten thousand miles from the Jewish community I love so much, and this 'solo Seder' serves to remind me of my Jewish commitment. I am the only P.C.V. in this area and the only American as well." JWB months ago began sending Passover foods and religious supplies to Jewish chaplains with the U.S. Armed Forces around the world, and the JWB Women's Organizations' Services has sent 'solo Seder' packages to isolated GIs. Included in JWB's planning were Peace Corps Volunteers in remote areas of the globe.

Mr. Mogul continued: "The Passover season is one when families reunite after a year of separate pursuits, a time when ties with the Jewish faith are strengthened. . . Reunion with my family is now physically impossible. However, I will be able to strengthen my ties with Judaism even though I am in a land where being Jewish is considered an invalid position.

"This year Passover has a special meaning for me. I can remember my grandfather and my father reading the story of Passover. It is the story of a people struggling for freedom. . . It has a profound bearing on the mind of a Jew and the mind of an American, and I am a product of both of these heritages. The epic continues and now I am a part of that epic. As a Peace Corps Volunteer I have chosen to take up the banner of freedom that was waved so valiantly by my forefathers over three thousand years ago.

"The Passover Seder cannot be partaken of in the company of one. This fact, coupled with the concepts of Seder hospitality, has impelled me to invite the two Catholic priests here to celebrate the festival with me. Both read Hebrew but have never witnessed a Seder; hence, it will be an evening of learning as well as commemoration. I thank you for giving me this opportunity."

The eight-day Passover festival begins this year at sundown on April 16. The National Jewish Welfare Board, the government-authorized agency for religious and morale services to Jews in the U.S. Armed Forces, and in veterans hospitals, is the national association of YM-YWHAs and Jewish Community Centers.

The Name Is Andrew, Please

The little boy's name is Sui Fei Wong. In Chinese this means Brilliance-in-Scholarship Wong, and that's a lot of name if you are six years old and other boys have such names as John.

So at P.S. 1, at 8 Henry Street, New York, in Chinatown, Brilliance-in-Scholarship Wong changed his name to Warren Wong, writes Robert Daley, in the New York Times. He was one of twelve Chinese children who took American names in a brief ceremony in the school auditorium.

About a third of the pupils, at U.S. 1 are Chinese; a third are Puerto Rican; and a fifth Negro.

In kindergarten, half the children are Chinese, including many recent refugees from Hong Kong who speak no English. These get the special attention of bilingual teachers.

Dr. Toby Kurzband, the principal, sent members of his staff to ask Chinese parents: "In what way can we help you best?"

To the surprise of Dr. Kurzband, many of the parents replied, "Give American names to our children."

Miss April Lou, who was born in the U.S., was picked to select new names for the children.

"If the parents had a favorite name, that was given priority," she said, but most had no favorites.

In such cases, Miss Lou suggested names that were similar in sound or meaning to the Chinese names. Thus, Har Jang Eng became Harold Eng; and Man Ying Chan became Grace Chan, says the New York Times, because Ying means gracious or graceful.

One ten-year-old boy, Chung Chan, also wanted a new name. The boy had decided on Andrew, but Miss Lou wanted to give him a name that "was not too unusual in the Chinese community."

"Why not Warren Chan, that's a nice Chinese name?"

"No, Andrew," the boy replied.

"Ronald Chan has a Chinese sound," she countered.

"Andrew," the boy said.

"Craig Chan?" she asked.

"Andrew," he said.

Andrew Chan took his place in class, a triumphant grin on his face, and a placard bearing his new name on the front of his desk; Andrew.

The new names have no legal weight. They are, in effect, nicknames. But they will be used officially in school, and Dr. Kurzband believes they will help most children in their adjustment to American life.

P.S. 1 has 827 pupils, and Dr. Kurzband is determined to emphasize the varied cultural backgrounds of these pupils. The school, established in 1806 as New York's first public school, says the New York Times, honors Chinese New Year's Day; Spanish Language Week; Negro History Week; and St. Patrick's Day.

Headdress Is A Must For Weddings, Also Gloves

At any wedding the women guests should wear gloves and hats. Black gloves should be the last choice but, if the ensemble cries out for them, they are now permissible. If a hat is absolutely out of the question, then a suitable headdress must be acquired because the guest must not appear bareheaded.

The guest's costume should be in keeping with the formality, or lack of it, of the ceremony, and should be as smart as possible. But there should be no attempt to draw attention from the bride.

CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS AGAIN ASKS CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION TO NAME A JEW TO NATIONAL RELIGIOUS ADVISORY COUNCIL; ALSO NEW RULES ON VIEWS OF HATE-MONGERS

The Canadian Jewish Congress made a submission, signed by Michael Garber, Q.C., president, to the Committee on Broadcasting, which is headed by R. M. Fowler, suggesting that a representative of Jewish faith be appointed to the National Religious Advisory Council of the CBC and that rules be laid down for guidance on broadcasting of views of "avowed hate-mongers and racist propagandists".

In support of this request for the appointment of a representative of the Jewish faith to the National Religious Advisory Council, the submission indicated:

"It is a commonplace to observe that on this continent we live in a pluralistic society. At times the Jewish community is faced with a disconsolate feeling that certain public institutions act in complete ignorance of this and thus posit their policies on what can only have validity in the ambience of a homogeneous society.

"To give partial effect to our views on this proposition we have on several occasions requested the President of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to name a representative of the Jewish religion to the National Religious Advisory Council of the CBC. Such requests have never been affirmatively acted upon, it being argued that 'we must keep the Council to a manageable size, in respect to the number of representatives of denominational groups'. The CBC merely arranged for Jewish participation in local religious advisory committees (whereby the respective appointments, incidentally, have been made in rather haphazard fashion).

"We firmly believe that the Jewish faith cannot possibly be put into the category of just another denomination of limited numbers. We also insist that the advice which may be needed from time to time on programming and content can be reliably obtained only from a properly qualified representative of our faith. As the recognized national spokesman of Canadian Jewry, our organization is ready to propose to the CBC from time to time a list of suitable names from which to make an appointment. It would appear a rather incongruous practice at a time when Judaism is clearly recognized, certainly on this continent, as one of the three major and distinct faiths, to refer to the numerical minority position in denying our request for one suitable representative on the National Religious Advisory Council. . ."

Asking that rules be laid down for guidance of broadcasters the submission pointed out:

"It is recognized that news coverage is one thing, but the recent spate of broadcasts — on radio and television — which gave national platforms and immense propaganda opportunities to known vicious merchants of hate is quite another.

"In the mature estimate of many qualified and impartial observers, whose judgment should weigh more heavily than that of some enthusiastic producers and station managers, whose motivations can obviously not be solely grounded in considerations of public service, this rush into sensationalism was, on balance, appraised as of dubious value to the Canadian body politic as a whole.

"Without going into a post-mortem of these various productions, we believe the enclosed editorials from both the Toronto Star and Telegram as well as from Le Droit and from the Montreal Star contain certain formulations which might well serve as a point of departure for a discussion within your committee. We realize that extreme situations of this kind might be covered by section 5 (1) (b) of the Broadcasting Regulations. We would commend for the consideration of your committee the determination of the extent to which these regulations might be refined".

Eighty Percent Of Young Jews Go To Colleges

The American Jewish Year Book reports that, in proportion to their numbers, almost three times as many Jews in the United States go to college as do college-age men and women in the population generally.

Alfred Jospe, director of program and resources of the Bnai Brith Hillel Foundations, says in an article in the book that statistics show that close to eighty per cent of Jewish men and women of college age attend schools of higher learning, says the New York Times, whereas the general figure is 27 per cent.

The 65th edition of the Year Book, published jointly by the American Jewish Committee and the Jewish Publication Society, is a 499-page compendium of events and trends in American and world Jewish life.

Mr. Jospe writes that last year 4,420,000 students — just above a quarter of all Americans between 18 and 24 — were enrolled in public and private schools of higher education. Of that number, 275,000, or about six per cent were Jewish. But the Jewish total, Mr. Jospe states, represented close to eighty per cent of the total Jewish population of college age, estimated at something over 335,000.

MONTREAL CATHOLIC SCHOOL COMMISSION REPORT ON BIZARRE CASE OF CHRIST BESIDE HITLER IN CLASSROOM, PLUS SWASTIKAS AND "HEIL", REMAINS SECRET

The Montreal School Commission condemned the use of Nazi symbols in a seventh grade classroom in Montreal and ordered the removal of a young teacher, his principal, and the district supervisor from their posts, reports Frank Howard in the Montreal Star.

The teacher, 22-year-old Brother René Lahaie, got off with the lightest penalty. He was suspended from his teaching post at de-la-Mennaie School for the remainder of the year.

His principal, Brother Hector Asselin, 39, is to be removed indefinitely.

Since the Commission does not have individual contracts with the two Brothers, the order will have to be executed by their religious community, the Brothers of Christian Instruction.

The third party in the case, District Supervisor Antonio Girard, 59, will be removed from his post "and transferred to other functions" to be decided upon in the near future.

A statement issued by Commission President Marc Jarry said that "the method in question" had been used in only one class, that its aim was not to teach "Nazi doctrine," that there was no "propaganda" in favor of Naziism and that there was "no apparent" bad effect on the pupils who had undergone Brother Lahaie's experiment in "competition."

However, because "the method was condemnable," it, and the three educators named in the case, were "withdrawn."

The statement was issued after a 90-minute discussion of a report prepared by the Commission's director of education, Jean-Marie Mathieu. The discussion took place during a special session from which reporters were excluded.

Neither the report itself, nor minutes of the closed-door meeting were made available because they "involved personalities," President Jarry said.

The investigation which led to the report was prompted by newspaper articles and photos which showed that Brother Lahaie had a picture of Adolf Hitler beside that of Christ in his classroom. Swastikas also formed part of the decor.

He taught his pupils to say "Heil Christ" every morning and graded their achievements in class by military ranks, including the ranks of "SA" and "SS" for the best students.

According to Mr. Mathieu, who spoke to reporters after the meeting, the investigation had shown that the young brother was completely unaware of the historical implications of the symbols he had used to stimulate the interest of his young students.

"His responsibility," he said, "is mitigated by his youth . . . He was naive to say the least, and certainly careless, but his motives were good." Mr. Mathieu felt however that the brother director and the district supervisor should have known better.

The director of education explained the apparent contradiction between the Commission's claim, on the one hand, that the method had produced no observable bad habits, and on the other, its condemnation.

He laid particular stress on the fact that the report and Mr. Jarry's statement had said that there were no "apparent" bad effects. The long-term effects could not be known.

Brother Lahaie's system could not be regarded in any sense as a "pilot project." It was "totally unacceptable" to put portraits of Hitler and Christ side-by-side or to use ranks like SS to classify students.

of the Parliament, youthful public officials like Dr. Kugler and the students who regularly occupy most of the 160 spectator seats at the Auschwitz trial represent Germany's conscience in this affair.

They are not willing to let time solve the problem of retribution, and they have the momentum of German justice supporting them. The wheels of justice will keep turning for years, says the New York Times. The question is how fine they will be required to grind.

claims for Jewish property seized after the Nazi take-over of Austria.

Mr. Goldman was a lifelong resident of Lowell, Mass. He was born there on December 4, 1890, and was graduated from Boston University's Law School summa cum laude at the age of nineteen. Too young to be admitted to the bar, he remained at Boston University for two years, one as a fellow, and the second as an assistant instructor.

Admitted to the bar in 1912, Mr. Goldman founded a law practice in Lowell and maintained it for 58 years until his death.

He was assistant district attorney in Middlesex County in 1920-21 and president of the Lowell Bar Association, 1938 to 1941. Mr. Goldman was active in local affairs as well as in national and international organizations. He was founder in 1926 of the Lowell Community Center and served as its first president.

He was a member of the board of governors of Hebrew University in Jerusalem; an overseer of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America; a director of the American Joint Distribution Committee; and was active in many other organizations, says the New York Times. Mr. Goldman leaves his wife, Rose; three sons, Robert H. of Lowell; Edward S., of Denver, and Frederic G., of New York; a brother, Max Goldman, of Lowell; a sister, Mrs. Annie Boorstein, of Haverhill, Mass.; and seven grandchildren.

One-Man Shanghai Council Caring For China's Dwindling Jewish Community

By Monty Jacobs, of the World Jewish Congress in New York

A few weeks ago a brief report came out of Shanghai to the World Jewish Congress in New York stating that not more than 26 Jews are left in China today from a community that numbered 25,000 twenty years ago.

On receipt of his information the World Jewish Congress addressed a detailed inquiry to P. I. Yudalevich, the chairman of what is now the shadow council of the Jewish community in Shanghai. A number of questions were asked of Mr. Yudalevich. He replied to each fully and factually. These are the questions and the answers:

1. Q: How many Jewish adults and how many children are left in China?

A: Of the 24 Jews, two left in December, 1964, now residing in China only two are under twenty. The average age of the rest is over 65.

2. Q: How many of these persons require relief?

A: About 10 persons in Shanghai are constantly in need of cash relief or special grants.

3. Q: What facilities do you have for Jewish education?

A: Private tutors are engaged for the two Jewish youth.

4. Q: What happened to the Shelter House formerly run by the community?

A: In the last few years there were only four inmates in the Shelter House which consisted of 16 rooms, enough to accommodate 30 to 40 inmates. In its heyday, there used to be as many as 55 persons in the Shelter House. However, to maintain the operation of the Shelter House and its kosher kitchen, even with four inmates, minimum staff of four had to be employed. To effect economies, we had to close down the Shelter House after the departure of two of the remaining four inmates. We found rooms for the last two and manage to cover their living expenses.

5. Q: What happened to the synagogues and other institutions abandoned by the community?

A: There were three synagogues, a Jewish school, a Jewish hospital, and a Jewish club in Shanghai. Only the Jewish hospital compound was rented. The equipment of the hospital was sold as far back as 1952 to cover the severance pay of 56 employees, and the balance of the proceeds went to the medical relief fund.

One synagogue, erected by the Shanghai Ashkenazi Jewish Communal Association, was sold together with the furniture on July 17, 1958, for 28,000 Chinese dollars. Another synagogue, erected by the Sephardic Jewish Communal Association, was sold on March 18, 1957, for 13,000 Chinese dollars. The proceeds of both sales went to our relief funds.

The Shanghai Jewish Club was placed under the custody of the Shanghai Real Estate Control Bureau on September 26, 1960, and is now considered as a public property. At present we are negotiating the sale of the remaining Jewish school and synagogue to meet our outstanding debts. Our financial position has been bad and the only income of the council is derived from the rent of the Jewish school and remaining synagogue which are now leased by an organization.

The net income is about 680 Chinese dollars per month which, together with the proceeds from the sale of some surplus furniture in the former Shelter House and office, are barely enough to cover our expenses.

6. Q: What happened to the equipment in the various Jewish institutions?

A: In 1956 we sent to Israel 11 boxes of books from the former Jewish library of the Shanghai Jewish Club, and 16 cases containing religious books, and 14 Torah scrolls. At present we still have some religious books, silver ornaments for religious purposes, and two Torah scrolls. All the archives and records are kept with the Council office. We are still issuing hundreds of Ghetto Letters and other certificates every year to applicants all over the world.

Each applicant is entitled to receive restitution money of about U. S. $800 from the relevant German and Austrian Governments and Municipalities on presentation of the Ghetto Letter issued by this Council. The requests for Ghetto Letters are coming in without interruption. It is estimated that the work will not be concluded for some years.

7. Q: How many Jewish cemeteries are there and what is happening to them?

A: There were four Jewish cemeteries in Shanghai:

Mohawk Road Cemetery, 304 graves; Baikal Road Cemetery, 1,892 graves; Point Road Cemetery, 834 graves; Columbia Road Cemetery, 878 graves.

With the exception of the Columbia Road Cemetery, all the other three were transferred to Chi An Public Cemetery in Chin-poo, a suburb about 15 kilometers from the town. Appropriate arrangement will be made to take care of the Jewish cemeteries, when there is hardly a Jew left in Shanghai.

8. Q: What is the structure of the Jewish Community Council now?

A: After World War II, there were three Jewish communities in
